Chief Residents Are Thankful for Exceptional Opportunity

One or more Chief Residents are elected each year by their peers. While their primary responsibility is to serve as voice for all residents, the Chief Residents are also members of the program's Education Committee. A key function of that committee is to interview and help select a new class of residents each year.

Campbell received a record number of 583 applications this year for the residency program. Three rounds of interviews begin mid-December, with the final selection for the eight slots in March.

"Paul and Ben have been outstanding representatives for our residents as Chiefs. Campbell has a long history of training orthopaedic surgeons and we are confident that they will serve their patients well and continue the legacy of excellence," said Dr. David Richardson, Residency Program Director.

Above all else, my time with the Campbell Clinic has shown me the level of dedication and desire to learn that it takes to become a great doctor. Listening and connecting with patients, understanding the right treatment for each patient, these are skills that you can't learn in a textbook. These are principles that my mentors at the Campbell Clinic have demonstrated day-by-day, patient-by-patient.
